Donation lets choir be heard

Posted Friday, Jul. 01, 2011

Thank you to infinity and beyond.

For the past six years, Mary Orr Intermediate's sixth-grade choir has performed a Broadway Jr. musical and even though the students have always done an amazing job of singing and acting, the audience has always had trouble hearing the individual voices on stage. This year, however, was different. This year the Mary Orr Choir had an incredibly generous thing happen to them thanks to choir member Addison Sneed and her step-dad, Max Curry. Max owns Infinity Sound and offered to help fix the sound problem. He donated more than $5,000 worth of equipment including six wireless microphones, two hand-held wireless microphones and a portable mixer to make sure it all worked with the current sound system. He and his crew spent hours working with the old and new systems to make sure the balance was perfect and the new microphones worked from every part of the stage.

Parents who care and get involved in our schools always make a big difference and Max Curry did just that. Thank you, Max and the Infinity Sound guys, for your generous donation and support for Mary Orr Choir.
